Hotel El Palace Barcelona, Barcelona

Hotel El palace facade in Barcelona, Spain

Locals still call El Palace the “El Ritz,” as it was César Ritz’s last great project and is still related to its past dramatic grandeur. The lobby’s black columns are the definition of mausoleum chic, as if ready to direct a Salome show. Dali used to live here and once asked the staff to bring a big horse to his room, but there’s also a rumor that Ramón Mercader, Trotsky’s murderer, was once the master of the house. Guests have dinner at the midnight-blue restaurant Amar, serving ponzu oysters, caviar, and spider-crab cannelloni, or dance at the rooftop pool terrace has been reclaimed by summer DJ sets and cocktail-fuelled art lessons.
